WILTONS

Never Let You Down | St James' | £££££

Tory grandees, princes in exile and captains of industry pile into Wiltons each weekday at 1pm, filling its booths and tables according to a pecking order as immutable as it is impenetrable. It's a place that's ineffably grand but also joyously unstuffy, where the British menu changes not on the whim of any chef but merely nods to the seasons. If you have to ask for anything during your visit (beyond stating your food and wine order), something is very much amiss.
